

Biographical Sketch for Jack Curtis (Brief)

Jack is Founder and CEO of Corporate Health Partners, LLC (CHP), based in Atlanta, Georgia. CHP, which was founded in 2002, provides comprehensive, systematic wellness programming featuring engaging, face-to-face health coaching for employers at their worksites.

Jack is a member of the HERO Think Tank, and chairs the Leadership Committee, one of the three committees that do the work of the Think Tank. (HERO is the Health Enhancement Research Organization, composed of thought leaders among employers and providers engaged in Employee Health Management). Jack has also been a member of the "League of Leaders" that guide IHC (the Institute for Healthcare Consumerism).

Jack earned a BS in Biomedical Engineering at the University of Tennessee in Knoxville and started his career at NASA. He later earned an MS in Engineering Management, also from the University of Tennessee.

About Corporate Health Partners

Corporate
Health Partners

Cultivating a Healthier Workforce

CHP is a full-service wellness company that builds corporate health and wellness programs for mid-sized employers across the nation. CHP's strength is high-touch, hands-on program management that delivers high engagement and sustainable risk reduction.

The key is providing local experts for each worksite - to implement best practices, coach the client's wellness team and deliver highly engaging, year-round programming.

In particular, CHP provides face-to-face health coaching that's complimented by weekly touch points from its onsite staff. CHP's systematic approach and hands-on focus weaves wellness into the culture - achieving over 85% participation, sustainable reduction of health risks and over 85% client retention.

See www.chp-inc.com for more information.